Thomas N. Gilmartin serves as President of TriState Capital's New York Operation, where he is responsible for all commercial banking and middle market activities including recruitment of seasoned bankers, business development, relationship management and credit quality of the portfolio throughout the market.

Tom has over 34 years of commercial banking experience within the New York City and Metropolitan markets and has been instrumental throughout his career in developing new markets, building franchise value and expanding the culture and brand of the institutions that he has been affiliated with. Most recently Tom served as Executive Vice President / Chief Lending Officer at a New York based bank where he was responsible for the commercial banking efforts which included business development, portfolio management and credit quality of bank assets.

Prior to that, Tom served as Regional Vice President / Senior Lending Officer with a large regional bank that expanded into the New York City Market. Tom was charged with driving the success of both the commercial banking and retail banking platforms in his market and because of his success, was part of the bank's Executive Leadership Team in New York.

As a long-standing member of the New York Metropolitan community, Tom has been on the boards of numerous civic and charitable organizations and presently serves on the board of the United Way of New York. Tom holds a Bachelors Degree in Business Administration from the New York Institute of Technology. Tom also attended a money center bank's corporate credit training program in affiliation with The University of Pennsylvania.
